

I am writing regarding Sinclair Broadcasting's decision to force stations to air an anti-Kerry "documentary" in what is, I believe, an attempt to influence the outcome of the presidential election.

That this is even happening is, in my opinion, the foremost argument against media consolidation. Is this a forerunner to complete media and information control by whatever party happens to have the majority of power?

I hope that this event encourages the FCC to re-think its position on radio and television monopolies.

Sincerely,
